"A New Year and New Possibilities"
Rev. Drew West, Associate Minister

"I am about to do a new thing; now it springs forth; do you not perceive it?
I will make a way in the wilderness and rivers in the desert." -Isaiah 43:19

People are deeply retrospective. I find that most of the time when I talk with friends, we end up reflecting on great moments and cherished memories from the past. In our church and around Fayetteville, we walk by many commemorative plaques marking when something was built, when a significant historical moment took place, or when a notable person once stood in a particular spot. Remembering comes naturally to us.

Yet as we stand at the beginning of a new year, the more I dwell in Scripture, the more I realize that while Scripture certainly remembers crucial and formative moments from the past, it is often oriented toward the future. Scripture tells us of a God who is still calling us into newness and holiness today. God is shaping what is to come and calls us to holiness of heart and holiness of life.

The Bible's emphasis on vision and hope for the future can be seen clearly in the way the Gospel writers quote the Old Testament. When an Old Testament passage is quoted in the Gospels—and throughout much of the New Testament—our English translations often read, "As it is written..." Notice that they do not say, "As it was written." This reflects the Greek perfect tense. In ancient Greek, the perfect tense acknowledges something spoken or done in the past, while emphasizing that its meaning and impact is ongoing. This points to a deeper truth: much of our sacred text is less concerned with merely telling us what happened and more invested in proclaiming anchoring realities that shape our imagination and lives for what lies ahead—a future marked by hope, salvation, and renewal.

Of course, many of the details of that future remain unknown. I believe this is why looking backward can feel comforting, while looking forward sometimes carries pangs of anxiety. As Christians, however, we are invited to face the future with hope. The same God who spun the stars and skies into being, the same God who formed us in the divine image, is still on the move. Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today, and forever. While many things remain uncertain, we can know with confidence that God is faithful and that God will lead us as we learn to live with increasing trust.

So, what new things are already unfolding? What new things is God doing among us in 2026? Confirmation began this week with a wonderful group of eight confirmands. Our choir and musicians continue to reach greater heights in worship, leading us into deeper joy and praise. Our preschool is growing, and its director is filled with passion and energy for the future. Rev. Kaylen Short is preparing sermons that will stir and awaken our faith in the days ahead. Lent begins next month, followed by Easter and then Pentecost. I could go on and on. God is doing new things in our midst. The question is not whether God is at work, but whether we will perceive it.
